ANECDOTES OF HENRY CLAY.

His Boyhood and His Senatorial Career.

The North American Review, for January, has an article on the boyhood of Heary Clay, and gives the following account of him as he attended school and appeared as a clerk in

We catch our first glimpse of the boy when Mr. Wright looked up for a moment, picked he sat in the little log school-house, without with his finger the hair behind his ear, and windows or floor, one of a humming score of shoeless boys, where a good natured, irritable, drinking school master taught him to read, write and cipher as far as Practice. This was the only school he ever attended, and that was all he learned at it. His widowed mother all he learned at it. His widowed mother, with her seven young children, her little farm and two or three slaves, could do no more for Next, we see him a tall, awkward, slender stripling of thirteen, still barefoot, clad in homespun butternut of his mother's making, tilling her fields, and going to mill with his bag of corn strapped upon the family pony. At fourteen, in the year 1791, a place was from it," said he, and with mighty emphasis, found for him in a Richmond drug store, where he served as an errand boy and youngest clerk

Then occurred the event which decided his and addressed his remarks to him throughout. career. His mother having married again, her Mr. Clay, in his softest and most conciliatory husband had influence enough to procure for the lad the place of copying clerk in the office of the Court of Chancery. The young gentlemen then employed in the office of that Court long remembered the entrance among them of their new comrad. He was fifteen at the time, but very tall for his age, very slender, very awkward, and far from handsome. His good mether had him arrayed in a tull suit of pepper-and-salt "figginy." an old Virginia fabric of silk and cotton. His shirt and shirt-collar were stifly starched, and his coat tail stood out husband had influence enough to procure for tone and phrase said he could well conceive were stifly starched, and his coat tail stood out holdly behind him. The dandy law clerks of metropolitan Richmond exchanged glances as his gawky figure entered, and he took his place at a desk to begin his work. There was something in his manner which prevented their indulgence in the jests that usually greet the arrival of a country youth among city blades; and they afterward congratulated one another that they had waited a little before beginning to tease him, for they soon found that he had brought with him from the country an exceedingly sharp tongue.

Of his first service little is known, except the immense fact that he was a most diligent which we intend to sell at a small advance on reader.

As he grew older, the raw, awkward stripling became a young man, whose every movement had a winning or a commanding grace Handsome, he never was, but his ruddy face and abundant light hair, the grandeur of his forehead and the speaking intelligence of his countenance, more than atoned for the irregularity of his features. His face, too, was a compromise. With all its vivacity of expression, there was always something that spoke of the Baptist preacher's son-just as Andrew Jackson's face had the set expression of a Presbyterian elder.

But of all the bodily gifts bestowed by nature upon this favored child, the most unique and admirable was his voice. Whoever heard one more melodious? There was a depth of tone in it, a volume, a compass, a rich and tender harmony which invested all he said with magesty. We heard it last when he was an old man, past seventy; and all he said was a few words of acknowledgement to a groupe of ladies in the largest hall in Philadelphia. He spoke only in ordinary tone of conversation, but his voice filled the room as the organ fills a great cathedral, and the ladies stood spell bound as the swelling cadences rolled about the vast aparment. We have heard much of Whitefield's piercing voice and Patrick Henry's silvery tones, but we cannot believe that either of those natural orators possesseed an organ superior to Clay's majestic which they are prepared to make up at short bass. No one who ever heard him speak will notice, and at reasonable prices. aug 14-tf find it difficult to believe what tradition reports, that he was the peerless star of the Richmond Debating Society in 1795.

The following reminiscences of Mr. Clay are from the pen of the Hon. Thomas Ewing, who wrote them as a contribution to a Sanitary Fair: Mr. Clay, with all bis terrible power of denunciation. was in ordinary debate pleasant and playful. When dealing with an ordinary adversary, he often reminded me of the lines in Milton's description of Eden before the fall:

'Sportive the lion ramped, and in his paw

Dar dled the kid." On one occasion—the year I do not remember, but it was the first time the Whigs carried an election in the city of New York-I found him early in his seat with a newspaper in his hand. As soon as the journal was read, he rose, quite out of order, announced to the President (Mr. Van Buren) the Whig victory, spoke of their noble efforts in the cause of their country, and of their brilliant success. "Your own fellow-citizens, Mr. President-the proud capital of your noble State-has made its voice heard in our halls in defence of the Constitution of our country. Ah! Mr. President, does not this.

warm your patriotic heart?" The impudence and absurdity of this appeal was too much for the dignity of the presiding officer. Mr. Van Buran's face drew itself into I know not how many indescribable lines, in which the comical predominated, and he slid down in his seat until nothing of him was visible but the smooth top of his head. He soon called some one to the chair, came down, took pinch of snuff with Mr. Clay, and after a pinch of snuff with Mr. Clay, and after a manufacture of snuff with Mr. Clay, and after a shell genuine GARDEN SEED, consisting Plumbing, in all their branches. wholesome laugh between them the morning business went on. His classical allusions (English classics) were few, but sufficiently happy. His attempt to cite poetry generally failed. On one occasion he attempted the hackneyed quotation from "Let the galled jade wince, our withers are unwrung. He mistoook the last syllable, and, with great distinctness and fine emphasis, made it, "unstrung." Watkins Leigh sat on his right; I on his left; both at the same instant, in suppressed voice, pronounced the word "unwrung," The double prompting confused him; he drew himself up and with a strong emphasis made the word "unhung." He stood with a very pleasant and unembarrassed countenance, until the laugh, which had become general, subsided, and then, with a gentle shake of the head and a long drawing out of the first word, said: "Ah? murder will out." I almost imagined he had slipped on purpose to show his a roitness in CUMBERLAND LUMP AND RUN OF recovering.
